Summary	Governor Schwarzenegger attended the Environmental Defense Fund's inaugural "Innovations Review: Making Green the New Business as Usual" report that resulted from a nationwide study of products and practices that increase environmental efficiency. The event announced businesses using the best practices and technologies that are good for the environment and the economy. The EDF selected more than 20 innovations and 31 companies throughout the country, eleven of the companies from California. The governor said, "The one thing these companies have in common is leadership. And leadership is exactly what we need to tackle the enormous challenges of climate change while protecting economic growth." Included in the report is a list of laws and policies relative to protecting the environment that the Governor has supported.
